DAY 198

THE INFINITY SOLUTION

WE WERE SITTING in the desert sand when I asked him a question.

"God is one. And God is three. Mathematically speaking," I said, "I don't see how it can work. One can never equal three and three can never equal one."

At that, it was I who picked up a stick and began writing numbers in the sand.

"One plus one plus one equals three, not one."

"And if it was one divided by three?" asked the teacher.

Again I wrote it out on the sand.

"One divided by three equals one-third, not one."

"You're right," he said. "It doesn't work. How could it?"

"I guess it can't. So I should forget about trying to use equations."

I lifted the stick to erase the numbers when he grabbed my hand to stop me.

"I didn't say that. You just used the wrong equation. God is infinite. You can't use that which is finite to comprehend the infinite."

The teacher then took the stick and pointed it to the first equation. Next to every number he inscribed a symbol . . . the symbol of infinity.

"Now let's try it again. One infinity plus one infinity plus one infinity equals three infinities. How big is three infinities?"

"It's infinite. It's infinity."

"Thus three infinities equal one infinity," he replied. "Three equals one."

At that, he pointed the stick to the second equation and did likewise, inserting again the symbol of infinity.

"One infinity divided by three equals one-third of infinity. And what is one-third of infinity? One-third of infinity is . . . infinity. When you speak of God, you're speaking of the infinite. And one infinity and three infinities are equal. One-third of infinity and one infinity are likewise equal. So in the realm of God, the realm of the infinite, one does equal three and three does equal one. You can never fit the infinite inside the finite, and you can never fit God inside of your understanding. If you could, then He wouldn't be God. Then your understanding would be God. But God, by definition, must be greater than your understanding. And this will set you free. You see, you don't have to figure out God. But there is a way that the finite can understand the infinite."

"How?"

"When you believe!"

The Mission: Seek this day to live not limited by the limitations of your circumstances, problems, thoughts, and ways. Live by faith beyond them.
